LRAFB ASSISTS IN NORMANDY

PAGES 8-9

M. Wallace, a U.S. Army D-Day survivor, participates in the Iron Mike memorial parade June 3 in Sainte-Mere-Eglise, France. This year marks the 74th anniversary of Operation Overlord, the Allied invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944. The men and women of the U.S. military remain eternally indebted to the World War II veterans who demonstrated the selfless service and sacrifice that characterizes the Greatest Generation in defense of global peace and security.

Innovation: An enduring need for mobility enterprise

By Gen. Carlton Everhart II

Air Mobility Command commander

With today's high operational tempo, dynamic and ever-changing threats, aging aircraft fleets and resource challenges, innovation is key to Air Mobility Command's successful operations.

To sustain the excellence the Air Force is known for and to optimize the readiness of airmen charged with ensuring rapid global mobility, we must seek out and embrace change. We cannot pursue innovation and efficiencies in a comfortable, incremental manner. We must take bold leaps to leverage technologies and improve processes faster than bureaucracy to maintain a strategic advantage over adversaries.

Air Mobility Command's Phoenix Spark program breaks down stovepipes and flattens the corporate structure to encourage airmen to share their concerns and offer solutions. A Phoenix Spark hallmark is that it is a grassroots effort, run by first-line airmen who live the mission. The program empowers bold airmen to be innovative, and to use fresh ideas to solve workplace problems. Commanders are key to this process, as they deliberately allow time for airmen to explore and develop innovative concepts.

Mobility airmen quickly and enthusiastically embraced Phoenix Spark and have churned out dozens of initiatives that make them more effective, ready, and lethal when called upon. Airmen have adopted a culture that allows them to think at the speed of relevance and innovate without undue constraint or bureaucratic shackles. They are breaking paradigms and identifying ways to overcome age-old challenges, working with industry partners and learning where corporate best practices can be applied to military operations.

Air Mobility Command airmen are leading the way.

Dover Air Force Base airmen collaborated with the Air Force Research Laboratory's Advanced Power Technology Office and industry to enhance fuel efficiency via the installation of microvane apparatuses to reduce the drag on aircraft. Further, Dover is looking at the use of synthetic tie downs and winch cables to secure cargo instead of heavier cords, straps and steel chains. This action removes excess weight from the aircraft.

Master Sgt. Bartek Bachleda, a 22nd Air Refueling Wing aircraft boom instructor from McConnell Air Force Base, Kansas, won the inaugural Air Force Spark Tank Competition Cup for re-engineering the boom operator instructor platform position for the entire KC-135 fleet. This innovation promises to reduce back and neck injury risk for our mission-critical boom operators, enhancing mission readiness.

Charleston AFB, S.C., airmen created new mounts for the electronic flight bag, saving AMC nearly $2 million in repairs annually. Leadership created the space and environment to bring about positive change, and our airmen succeeded.

To bring in new ideas, places such as Fairchild AFB, Wash., and recently MacDill AFB, Fla., created TED Talk-like events called Leaders Inspiring for Tomorrow, or LIFT, to showcase leadership talents and innovation within their own communities.

To highlight the need for improved education for military families and inspire the next generation of airmen, AMC partnered with the Air Force Reserve Command to launch the flying classroom at March Air Reserve Base, Calif. Elinor Otto, one of the original Rosie the Riveters who bolstered the World War II industrial workforce, flew on that aircraft and shared her stories of being a pioneer and creating breakthrough moments. Later, MacDill became the first AMC wing to implement a flying classroom program during its Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts and Math event. MacDill educated 1,300 students from 20-plus schools about the Air Force and the importance of education. These interactive experiences demonstrated our commitment to the need to embrace innovation.

Innovation and creativity can be seen across our command, but a willingness to take chances, expose oneself to vulnerability, and not fall back on the status quo is key to success.

It's important to note that not every idea will be adopted or successful, and that's perfectly alright. Innovation is often spawned from failure, and programs such as Phoenix Spark harvest lessons learned to move forward with better ideas. Many of the successful ideas thus far have been small improvements or changes to existing programs or products. My hope is that small wins will lead to large victories as mindsets change and our approach to problem solving adapts. We must demonstrate that we are serious about being bold and innovative.

Our airmen are the Air Force's greatest resource. We have trained them. We have educated them. Now we have asked them how we can improve their effectiveness, and they are telling us. We must continue to encourage and embrace a culture of innovation and rapid implementation. We must trust our airmen and give them the resources they need to be successful today and into the future.

Don't be bugged by ticks, mosquitoes

By Tammy L. Reed

19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

Summer's here in Arkansas. People are working outdoors and having fun in the sun. From days at the lake and picnics, to camping, hiking and yard work, it's time to feel the fresh air, catch some sun and enjoy what the Natural State has to offer.

Unfortunately, some of what Arkansas has to offer this season includes some unpleasant insects such as ticks and mosquitoes that can impart disease and discomfort whenever they bite.

Ticks

"Ticks are our biggest problem," said Maj. Earl Thomas, 19th Aerospace Medical Squadron public health flight commander. "People are exposed more as they are out hiking and camping. The ticks are hatching or coming out of their dormant stage right now and are super hungry and ready to take a meal."

The risk of contacting ticks increases in the early morning, up until direct sunlight

The lone star tick is widely distributed in the southeastern and eastern United States. It can transmit Ehrlichia chaffeensis and Ehrlichia ewingii, which cause human ehrlichiosis, tularemia and STARI. It is a very aggressive tick that bites humans. The nymph and adult females most frequently bite and transmit diseases. The adult female is distinguished by a white dot or "lone star" on her back. Lone star tick saliva can be irritating, causing redness and discomfort at a bite site, but it does not necessarily indicate an infection.

depending on the location. When people get into wooded trails though, the risk is all day long.

Another danger zone for ticks is the transition area from wooded areas to manicured lawns. Ticks are waiting in that area to hitchhike on any carbon-dioxide exhaling, warm-blooded creature walking through it. The same goes for high grass, while leaf and bark litter and wood piles are where they hide during the day.

"The ticks that are out now, some people call seed ticks or an immature stage of an adult tick, are harder to see sometimes, so people are having ticks stay on them longer," Thomas said.

Timing is important with ticks as the longer they stay on, the more chance they have to transmit a disease. With most tick-borne diseases it takes four to six hours to transmit, so when done with any outdoor adventure, make sure to check for ticks because the sooner they are removed the better.

"Right now we have two cases of Lyme disease and five cases of Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever on the base," said 1st Lt. Allan Licudan, 19th AMS public health officer. "In 2017 we had five cases total, but now we have five so far, and it's expected to rise."

"It's important that if you find a tick, make sure you bring it to us," Thomas added.

"We have kits where we can send it off to have it tested for Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, Lyme disease or any of the diseases that a tick can carry, as getting ill can impact the mission, school and family life."

The best way to remove a tick, and approved by the Center for Disease Control, is to use tweezers on the tick as close to the skin as possible and gently but steadily pull it off. Thomas says any other method such as alcohol or other backyard remedies can actually increase the potential for disease transmission.

Of course, it's best to avoid getting ticks on you whenever possible. When outdoors in possible tick-infested areas, wear long pants and a long-sleeved shirt with t-shirt; tuck pants into boots and t-shirt into trousers, and wear sleeves down and snugly fastened at the wrist.

"Also when outdoors we recommend the use of Environmental Protection Agency-registered insect repellants on exposed skin," Thomas said. A list of registered products and additional information can be found on the Centers For Disease Control and Prevention and EPA websites that follow: <https://www.cdc.gov/ncezid/dvbd/about/prevent-bites.html>, <https://www.epa.gov/insect-repellents/find-repellent-right-you>.

MOSQUITOES

Like ticks, mosquitoes can transmit diseases. The West Nile virus is an issue in Arkansas, and the Zika virus is still a concern for anyone travelling to Central or South America.

A key to controlling mosquitoes is to understand that they prefer man-made habitats. Everything from a small children's pool in the backyard and water puddling on tarps, to clogged gutters and planters with water in trays are prime breeding grounds for mosquitoes. Eliminating that water is the most effective means of controlling them.

"If somebody has an unkempt pool or

The American dog tick is widely distributed east of the Rocky Mountains, and also occurs in limited areas on the Pacific Coast. It can transmit Tularemia and Rocky Mountain spotted fever. Adult females are most likely to bite humans, and people have the highest risk of being bitten during spring and summer. Dog ticks are sometimes called wood ticks.

birdbath, they're breeding mosquitoes that will fly out a football field or two away from that source. That's a lot of backyards impacted," Thomas said.

Community members can augment the personal protection methods mentioned above with other readily available products.

"The little fans you clip on that release DEET are great for sitting on your deck or in the bleachers at a sports event," Thomas said. "Citronella products also help to keep them away from you."

Arkansas has a large variety of ticks and mosquitoes, and the diseases they carry are as varied. A good place to learn about the different insects and diseases they carry is the Arkansas Department of Health website, www.healthy.arkansas.gov.

LRAFB Youth of Year exhibits core values

By Airman 1st Class Rhett Isbell
19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

Most children at 14 years old dream of driving to prom and seeing the light at the end of the high school tunnel. For Andreas Bradley, Flightline Upper Academy scholar, by the age of 14, he has already put himself on the fast track of success by earning the Youth of the Year Award.

Coming from a single parent household, some would already count young Andreas out, but with the help of his mom and the supportive community on Little Rock Air Force Base, he threw himself into helping not only himself, but other members of his Little Rock family through his volunteerism and academic success.

"I like taking the time to be active and be a part of the community," Bradley said. "It just feels good to help other people."

This selfless giving is not new for Bradley. He regularly finds time to volunteer during activities such as the Harvest Festival, Family Fest and the Armed Forces children run.

"The best part of my volunteering was seeing kids smile after laying out the eggs for the Harvest Festival," Bradley said.

Not only are his efforts seen from his family and friends, but also with his youth center mentors.

"Volunteering is just something he does," said Otis Williams, 19th Force Support Squadron youth sports coordinator. "He's the kind of kid who doesn't mind helping where help is needed. He already embodies the core values of the Air Force."

Having accomplished so much, this 14 year old is not slowing down any time soon. He is showing everyone that Integrity, Service and Excellence doesn't have an age requirement.

"I was just thankful to win," Bradley said.

NORMANDY, FRANCE — Three airlift squadrons and support personnel from Little Rock Air Force Base, embarked on an historic journey to Normandy, France, to support the 74th D-Day Anniversary remembrance events from May 30 to June 6.

Aircrew from the 41st, 61st and 62nd Airlift Squadrons and maintainers from the 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron, along with other DoD service members, dropped U.S. Special Operations operators, U.S. Army paratroopers and coalition forces during commemorative flyovers as well as participating in other memorial events.

Local festivities surrounding Sainte Mere-Eglise — one of the first towns liberated by the Allies during World War II — honored the both the Greatest Generation veterans as well as military members currently serving. Local residents and thousands of tourists all came together to touch a piece of history and to see the legacy continued by today's military.

"The anniversary of D-Day is very important to the French of Normandy," said Jean Luis Cauvin, Ozeville mayor, a town near Sainte Mere-Eglise. "United States Service members gave us our liberty."

Service members from the German military were in attendance at many of the ceremonies. Their presence highlights how crucial it is for all to remember what happened 74 years ago. Through remembrance, civilization will not soon forget the lessons learned through the shedding blood.

"Reconciliation can turn enemy into ally and opponent into friend," said Maj. Gen. Jon "Ty" Thomas, Strategic Deterrence and Nuclear Integration director of operations, Headquarters U.S. Air Forces Europe and Africa. "Today we stand here as allies."

The somber experience served as a reminder to service members and civilians to honor the memories of those before them.

"You my fellow (service members) are an example of the heroism displayed in the air and on the ground in the early hours of June 6, 1944," Thomas said. "It's our obligation and our privilege to defend liberty just as those who have gone before us have done."

Every year, commemorative events honor the Greatest Generation of service members and leaves a lasting reminder to the current generation of the torch that was passed to them they must now carry.

"This event was important because it allowed us to honor the service members who gave their lives for the people of Normandy, France," said Airman 1st class Chelsey Johnson, 41st Airlift Squadron loadmaster. "Getting to meet people who were directly affected by D-Day was an eye-opening experience."

SUSTAINING PARTNERSHIPS

Maintenance continues D-Day anniversary

STORY AND PHOTOS BY
AIRMAN 1ST CLASS GRACE NICHOLS,
 19TH AIRLIFT WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

NORMANDY, FRANCE -- Loadmasters, maintainers and aircrew from the 61st, 41st and 62nd Airlift Squadrons ensured the agility of Combat Airlift during a two-week assignment to Normandy, France, in honor of those who had made the ultimate sacrifice 74 years ago.

The crew flew almost daily, requiring the C-130J to be ready at a moments notice. The team of five maintenance career fields ensured that the aircraft could be utilized for the many flyovers in remembrance of that fateful day.

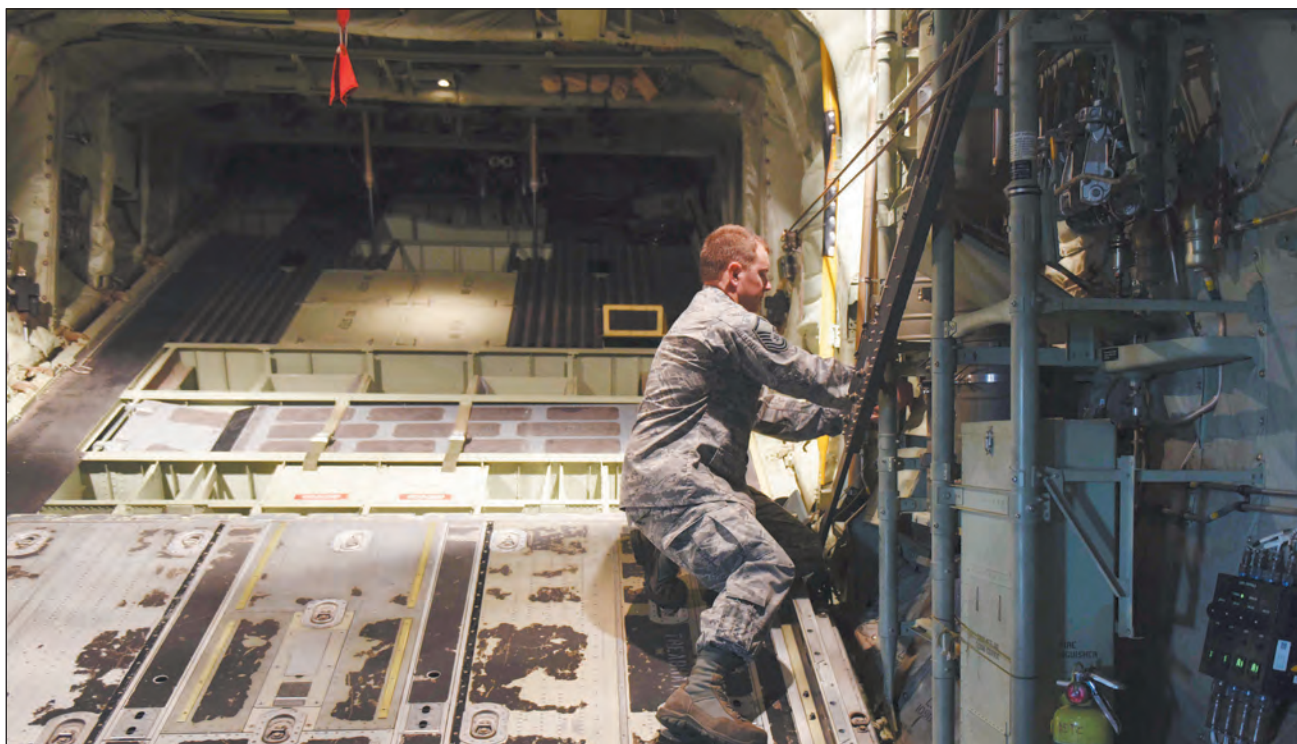

"We're out here to commemorate fallen service members with airdrops," said Master Sgt. Jason Peoples, 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron productions superintendent. "It's important that we provide a mission capable aircraft to fulfill those needs."

U.S. forces in Europe remain committed to collective defense and cooperative security alongside European allies and partners; the maintainers worked alongside other nations to achieve this goal.

"Aviation as a whole is a tight-knit group," Peoples said. "It's interesting seeing maintainers from other nations working through similarities and differences for the same mission."

When the maintainers were not tending to the aircraft, they were able to observe the heritage and appreciate the freedoms earned by the fallen service members on D-Day June 6, 1944.

"It has been said 'These freedoms do not come free, they must be defended,'" said Maj. Gen. Jon "Ty" Thomas, Strategic Deterrence and Nuclear Integration director of operations, Headquarters U.S. Air Forces Europe and Africa. "There is no question in my mind that this very spirit exists in the Airmen and Soldiers [at these ceremonies]."

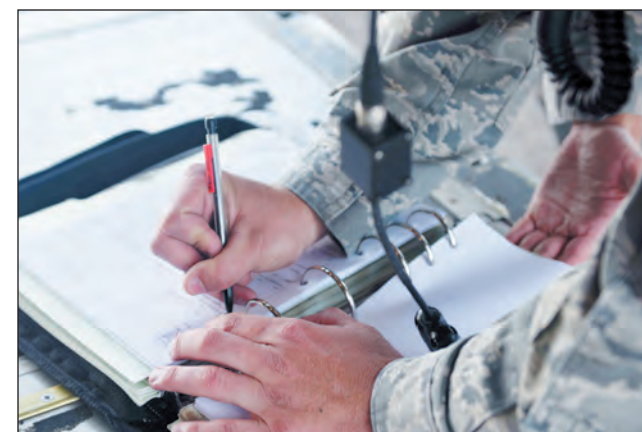

Maintainers and aircrew observe a flyover from the ramp of a C-130J on June 2 over Normandy, France. The 61st, 41st and 62nd Airlift Squadrons participated in the 74th D-Day anniversary with other historical units to support local events.

A 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron Airman performs preflight checks on June 2 in Cherbourg, France. The Airman was part of a two-week exercise to Normandy, France, in order to honor service members who made the ultimate sacrifice on D-Day.

(Above) Senior Airman Mason Barret, 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron guidance and control systems journeyman, assists with pre-flight checks June 2 at a landing zone in Cherbourg, France. U.S. forces in Europe remain committed to collective defense and cooperative security alongside European allies and partners. The maintainers worked alongside other nations to achieve this goal.

(Right) Maintainers listen to final instructions before a flyover June 2 at a landing zone in Cherbourg, France. The crew flew almost daily, requiring the C-130J to be ready at a moments notice. When the maintainers were not tending to the aircraft, they were able to observe the heritage and appreciate the freedoms earned by fallen service members on D-Day June 6, 1944.

A pre-flight checklist is filled out before a flyover June 2 over Normandy, France. The crew flew almost daily, requiring the C-130J to be ready at a moments notice. The team of five maintenance career fields ensured that the aircraft could be utilized for the many flyovers in remembrance of that fateful day.

Retired Air Force rated officers welcomed back on active duty

By Kat Bailey

Air Force's Personnel Center Public Affairs

JOINT BASE SAN ANTONIO-RANDOLPH, Texas (AFNS) – Retired Air Force rated officers with Air Force Specialty Codes 11X-pilot, 12X-combat systems officer or 13B-air battle manager are encouraged to apply for the Voluntary Retired Return to Active Duty Program to help alleviate manning shortages within the Air Force rated community.

Also eligible to apply are current Air Force rated officers in those AFSCs with an approved retirement order. Officers currently serving on active duty under the 2017 VRRAD program whose tour lengths are limited to 12 months may apply for tour extensions under this program.

The secretary of the Air Force approved the extension to VRRAD for implementation on May 11, 2018 as one of a wide range of initiatives the Air Force is pursuing to improve rated officers' quality of life and quality of service in order to increase retention and the rated officer inventory.

"Officers who return to active duty under VRRAD will fill rated staff and active flying staff, test, training and operational positions where rated officer expertise is required," said Maj. Elizabeth Jarding, Air Force's Personnel Center VRRAD rated liaison. "We can match VRRAD participants to stateside or overseas requirements where they'll fill critical billets that would otherwise remain vacant due to the shortage of rated officers."

Rated officers who received an active duty-retirement within five years, or will receive one within 12 months from their VRRAD date of application, in the ranks of captain, major or lieutenant colonel, and who are under age 50, may apply for the program, with applicants older than 50 considered on a case-by-case basis. Participation has expanded to up to 1,000 retired rated officers and active-duty tour lengths are increased to a minimum of 24 months and a maximum of 48 months.

In addition, applicants must be medically qualified for active duty and have served in a rated staff position within 15 years or been qualified in an Air Force aircraft within 10 years of application for flying positions. Refer to AFPC's VRRAD web page for aircraft specifics.

AFPC will accept applications for VRRAD until Dec. 31, 2018, or until all openings are filled, whichever happens first. Retired officers returned to active duty will not be eligible for the aviation bonus or for promotion consideration. Program participants will only deploy if they volunteer, unless they are assigned to a combat coded unit.

Officers who retired for physical disability are not eligible to apply.

Find additional information on VRRAD application procedures and eligibility requirements on the VRRAD page of the AFPC public website.
